is one of those really funny pictures that make you just want to laugh good and heartily. There are three others that are better than the average. Besides, there is a very catchy song entitled "The Girl That Threw Me Down."

Those who come out of the Bijou always seem to be pleased with the show. Better see it.

Mr. Crahan has a pleasant surprise for the patrons of the Theatrical last night; the surprise was a new singer, Miss Ida Hughes.

Miss Hughes possesses a fine soprano voice and has a great many friends in Barre, who remember her singing in "The Chimes of Normandy."

Judging from the loud applause and the crowds that stopped in front of the Theatrical last night when Miss Hughes was singing, she will be about the popular singer of the city.

SUSPECT AGAIN FLEES.

William Metcalf Seen in Epsom, N. H., But Eludes The Police.

Concord, N. H., July 10.—William Metcalf, who is suspected of attacking Miss Edith Strong in New Boston last Sunday, was seen in Epsom, about 12 miles from this city yesterday afternoon. He was found in a shanty by a man named Fowler, who recognized him by a newspaper portrait.

Fowler notified Sheriff Kimball of Merrimack county, who in turn informed Sheriff Ramsey of Hillsboro county, but when the officers reached Epsom Metcalf had fled.

They found in the shanty a blue handkerchief, supposed to be that which the assailant of Miss Strong was masked, also a portion of the rope with which she was tied, and letters addressed to Metcalf.

Sheriff Ramsey is making a search tonight for Metcalf, who formerly worked in Epsom.

Dr. Allen was immediately summoned and did all that was in his power to save the girl. Miss Champang is very low and it is not expected that she will live.

WANT CITY HALL NOW.

Montpelier Merchants Will Present a Protest Against Delay.

At a meeting of the Montpelier Merchants' association last night there was quite a bit of complaint entered that the city hall building in that city is not to be built this year, and it is expected that formal complaint to that effect will be made soon.

Seconds The Motion.

The Barre Times says: "The ministers set a good example when they went out into the fields on last 'Blue Monday' for their monthly meeting, there to take in the beauties of nature and breathe in the invigorating air, while at the same time they conducted the usual business that comes before the Ministers' Monday club and listened to the discussions. It is a challenge to the rest of us to get out into the open as much as possible, if not in the conduct of our business, then in the hours and minutes that are set apart for recreation and leisure, or that ought to be set apart."

The Times is right. And this well applies to Swanton. We don't get out enough. Here we are surrounded with every natural facility for outdoor life, the lake, the river, the woods, yet we do not half appreciate all these things. It is our opinion that the majority of people in town are utterly ignorant of the stores of natural beauty and the hours of contentment that are constantly in wait for them on our own Missisquoi river, and are theirs for the taking.

Outdoor life is a grand thing and should be encouraged not only from the standpoint of health, but also from the vitally important standpoint of one's own happiness.—Swanton Courier.

WHITHER?

By Rose Pastor Stokes.

From the Yiddish of Morris Rosenfeld.

Say, whither, whither, pretty one? The world is still at present!

O list how quiet 'tis around! Ere dawn—the streets hold not a sound Oh, whither, whither do you run? Sleep at this hour is pleasant.

The flowers are dreaming, dewy-wet; The birds' nests—they are silent yet. Where to, before the rising sun The world her light is giving?

"To earn a living."

Oh whither, whither, pretty child, So late at night a-strolling! Alone—with darkness round you curled All rests:—and sleeping is the world.

Where drives you now the wind-so wild? The mid-night bells are tolling! Day hath not warmed you with her light.

What aid canst hope then from the night? Night's deaf and blind!—Oh, whither, child, Light minded fancies weaving?

"To earn a living."

There will be a regular meeting of Barre Aerio of Eagles, Monday evening, July 13, at 7:30.
